Time: 30 minutes

I personally don't consider myself as a big fan of TV programs, even documentaries. But, once in a while, my family likes to gather to watch something interesting together. So, about a week ago, we all came across a film about the so-called "space-race". It was a movie about the first flights to, during the cold war. It's central role had the ~~first~~ men, who made the first launch to space happen. The movie had various footages of the spaceships launches, pictures of Neil Armstrong and Yuri Gagarin and was generally very informative. It was interesting to see the things we learn about in school from a different point of view. Another part of the movie that was extremely new is that the movie had showed the development of science under the ~~past~~ political pressure, which took place at that time.

I would absolutely recommend the movie to anyone, because it is not only ~~is~~ very full of action, but shows a lot of unspoken things about our history.
