Writing

Every person have read a book, watched a movie or cartoon, played a videogame and more at least for one time. After every of these processes, we want talk about it with our friends, have a conversation, we want to share our opinion. But, as Edmund Wilson said, "No two persons ever read the same book" What did he mean?

If you will hear this quote at the first time, you can be a little bit confused. I mean, two persons actually can read the same book, are not they?

But I think that words of Edmund Wilson have another meaning.

You know, we live in society, and in this society every person can understand a book, film, cartoon, TV-show, other person's words in own, specific way.

There are so many people in this world and so many different opinions about anything, so many sides of one big or little conflict, that sometimes because of that, in a past, civil wars were beginning, with a devastating and almost irreversible consequences. Even nowadays we live in a period of one big conflict of two sides with different opinions about our society, rights, possibilities of separate groups of people, and it's absolutely normal in a democratic country.

In a brief, I think that the true meaning of Edmund Wilson's words about two persons and one book is that in our world there are a lot of different thoughts about anything all people know.
