Writing

Once, Edmund Wilson said: „No two persons ever read the same book.“ It sounds weird, but I think, author really said that every person understand books in a different ways.

I agree with Edmund Wilson, because my point of view is that only author can explain the meaning of all phrases and words in book. Every single person make his own theories about the books, what they read. This is the main reason to support my opinion, because you know how interesting to think about meanings of books. I can <sup>illustrate</sup> (support) this facts with some examples.

Look, every single human, who studied at school, read „War and Peace“ by Lev Nikolaevich Tolstoy. So, experts discussing this roman story for a very long time. Every one, who read this book, found something interesting and maybe mystique in different parts of story. With this example I support my statement that only author knows true meaning of a book.

To sum up, I want to say that if you read book, you must think about its philosophy. Who knows, maybe author wrote his novel or story without any hidden thoughts, or he „gave breath“ to every word. It is will be a secret forever.
